National Aid of Common Schools.

The Blair bill "to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools." resis on the theory that ignorance is a menace to the Republic. If this experiment in popular government is over brought to failure through the ignorance of great numbers of its voters, it will save mothing from the wrock to say that the fault was with the several States which were unable or unwilling to provide their people with the advantages of a common school education. History would deal with us as the most stupid of blunderers who, having in the National Treasury abundant means, had refused to use some part thereof to make of ignorant persons capable citizens of the Republic rest on the intelligence and virtue of the people, it is poor statesmanship to allow ignorance and list twin sister vice to increase and multiply in the face of a Natoreal states which is greated and multiply in the face of a Natoreal states which is greated and multiply in the face of a Natoreal states which is greated and multiply in the face of a Natoreal states which is greated and multiply in the face of a Natoreal states which is greated and multiply in the face of a Natoreal states which is greated and multiply in the face of a Natoreal states where and multiply in the face of a Natoreal state where and multiply in the face of a Natoreal state which is said to be one of the best lorses of the Republic rest on the intelligence and multiply in the face of a Natoreal state where the same and multiply in the face of a Natoreal state which were all the same and the state of the same and the state of the same and the state of the same and the sa

It is everybody's business to con tribute to the maintainance of this noblest of experiments in government. It is everybody's interest to lift from the body everybody's interest to lift from the body politic, as far as may be, the dead weight of illiteracy which lies upon it. It is a melancholy feature of this phase of the national life that it shows no improvement. In 1870 there were in this country 5,058,154 persons of ten years of age and over returned as unable to write; in 1880 the number had grown to 6,239,058. The lilliterates hold their own with great tenacity.

These returns include many persons whose accomplishment with the pen goes no further than the ability to write their names. There are few questions in the census enumerator's list less candidly answered than this. The most ignorant are loth to admit that they cannot write at

While the Republican party was in National control with every prospect of so continuing this proposition was regarded by some gentlemen of the opposite party the faith cure with favor.

"They are mighty skentical in common was an "invantion of the argume" to be a control of the same o as an "invention of the enemy" to bribe and otherwise corrupt the people and public officers of the Southern States, which are to reap the largest immediate benefit if the bill becomes a law.

Such suggestions now are but echoes of the old report—scraps culled from the old arguments in opposition-for the National Thousants Say So.

Black-leg or Evil Quarter, as understood with our farmers and grazors, attaches to calves and yearlings. If arrely affects two or three-year-old cattle. The disease commences in the thigh and quarter and sometimies in the head. The parts affected, when cut open, exude black blood. It never appears in but one limb of an animal—the hind or fore-quarter. There is no certain cure known for the disease, when it has once developed itself in an animal. There are remedies which have been successfully used to a preventive, and which we do not remember to have seen published is bleeding. There is no Constitutional difficulty in the way. If the Constitution permits the appropriation of money to improve the Kanawha river and to relieve the sufferers by flood in West Virginia, the creation of a National Board of Health to exercise powers which certainly are not enumerated and are in their nature local—if the Constitution permits all this and more, it would seem to be a loss of time to lunt.
